DECISION

Statement of the Case

IRA SANDRON, Administrative Law Judge. This matter arises out of a consolidated complaint and notice of hearing issued on September 30, 2010,¹ against Gestamp South Carolina, LLC (the Respondent or Gestamp), stemming from unfair labor practice (ULP) charges filed by David Anthony Kingsmore and Reggie Alexander, individuals. The complaint alleges that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act) by suspending and then discharging Kingsmore and by discharging Alexander because they engaged in organizing activities on behalf of the United Steelworkers (the Union). The complaint further alleges that a supervisor committed two independent violations of Section 8(a)(1).

Pursuant to notice, I conducted a trial in Columbia, South Carolina, from December 6–10, at which I afforded the parties full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence.

Issues

- 5 1) Did the Respondent suspend Kingsmore on February 17, and then discharge him on February 24, because he did not disprove the Respondent's suspicion that he misrepresented the nature of his separation from prior employer BMW during his September 29, 2009 interview for a supervisory position, or because of his union activities?
- 10 2) Did the Respondent discharge Alexander on February 19 because he deliberately falsified his timesheet by claiming 38 extra minutes of pay for February 9, or because of his union activities?
- 15 3) Is Michael Fink a statutory supervisor and agent of the Respondent?
- 4) Did Fink, in approximately early February, unlawfully threaten Kingsmore with discharge for his union activities?
- 20 5) Did Fink, on February 11, unlawfully interrogate Alexander about his union activities?

Witnesses and Credibility

25 The General Counsel called Alexander and Kingsmore, Union Organizer Randy Rigsby, and the following employees: Human Resources (HR) Assistant Mary Harper, CMM Technician Jimmy Stewart, Jr., and Forklift Driver Dean Tollison.

30 The Respondent called the following managers/supervisors: HR Manager Susan Becksted, Maintenance Manager Dennis Blanton, General Manager Carmen Evola,² Director of Purchasing and Logistics Roger Fuller, Quality Supervisor James Holt (who was an hourly employee at all times relevant), Maintenance Supervisor Daniel Morris, Assembly Shift Supervisor Jason O'Dell, Shipping and Receiving Manager Michael Sullivan, and Quality Manager Jurgen Weckerman.

40 The Respondent also called Quality Engineers Michael Fink and Charles Beasley. The General Counsel alleges Fink to be a statutory supervisor, a contention that the Respondent denies. Although Beasley holds the same position as Fink, he is not named in the complaint, and it is immaterial for purposes of this decision whether or not he is a statutory supervisor.

45 Further, the Respondent called two employees: Line Technician Dominic Gist, Sr., and IMS Leader Jennifer Meese.

50 Deciding the issues in this case hinges on credibility resolution, including the plausibility of certain accounts of conversations and actions. Before going into specifics, I cite the well-established precept that “[N]othing is more common in all kinds of judicial decisions than to believe some and not all’ of a witness’ testimony.” Jerry Ryce Builders, 352 NLRB 1262, 1262 fn. 2 (2008), citing NLRB v. Universal Camera Corp., 179 F.2d 749, 754 (2d Cir. 1950), revd. on other grounds 340 U.S. 474 (1951).

 5 The trier of fact must consider the plausibility of a witness’ testimony and appropriately weigh it with the evidence as a whole. Golden Hours Convalescent Hospitals, 182 NLRB 796, 787–799 (1970).

10 Alexander was generally credible. He answered questions readily and with no apparent efforts to embellish or slant them, was appropriately consistent in his answers on direct and cross-examination, and his testimony comported with that of Rigsby, who was also credible.

15 Kingsmore, on the other hand, was not fully reliable. I do take into account his apparent lack of sophistication and perhaps naïveté. This is reflected in his answer to my question of why he confided in Fink that he was trying to get the Union in. He readily answered that Fink “kind of made Alex Keller [Kingsmore’s supervisor] leave me 20 alone . . . Keller was not a very nice person. . . . I’d had him throw stuff at me, cuss at me and grab me once.”³ That Kingsmore took such abuse from a supervisor certainly indicates that he was unaware of his avenues of recourse.

25 Nonetheless, the following factors diminish his credibility, particularly vis-à-vis other witnesses who struck me as more reliable. As Kingsmore’s testimony progressed, he expanded on antiunion sentiments expressed by management/supervisors; his testimony that the Union did not instruct him to try to keep organizational activities from management’s knowledge was contradicted by Rigsby and Alexander (and possibly by 30 common sense); and his testimony on cross-examination did not fully comport with what he said on direct examination.

35 The Respondent raised an issue about Harper’s status as a confidential employee, but in any event, she credibly testified only about general timekeeping practices in early 2010, and not on anything specific pertaining to Alexander or Kingsmore.

40 Stewart, in contrast, was not a reliable witness. His demeanor was markedly defensive. That aside, his testimony was unbelievable. Thus, he testified that at around the time Alexander was discharged, he was working at a computer when he overheard Supervisor O’Dell make the statement on the floor, about 7 or 8 feet away, “We got one of them. Now the rest of them will probably be scared now, but there’s a 45 couple more of them we got to get.”⁴ Yet, according to Stewart’s own testimony, he reacted casually and did not even bother to look up from the computer. This is particularly odd in light of Rigsby’s credited testimony that Kingsmore and Stewart were

50 ³ Tr. 437. Kingsmore’s testimony about his relationship with Fink was supported by Fink’s credible testimony that Kingsmore and other employees came to him to “vent” or seek advice when they experienced language problems with Keller and other members of the salaried group who had come from Germany. Tr. 607.

the first employees to have contact with the Union and were the most active members of the Union's organized committee.

5 O'Dell denied making any such statement, and I do not believe that he would have been so crass. In this regard, I credit the Respondent's witnesses' testimony that training was given to supervisors concerning what they should and should not say to employees. I also accept their testimony that everyone in the production area must wear ear plugs, which interferes with hearing normal speaking other than in face-to-face
10 conversation. Accordingly, I do not credit Stewart's testimony.

One other witness was noticeably defensive: Manager Sullivan, who appeared ill at ease throughout his testimony. As with Stewart, reasons aside from demeanor also lead me to doubt his believability. Thus, he testified that he had no conversations with 15 Alexander about the discrepancy in the latter's timecard records but then was directly impeached on this point by statements in his NLRB affidavit. He further testified that the reports two employees made to him that Alexander had come in late on February 9 did not lead him to investigate and compare the records, testimony that again was 20 contradicted by his affidavit. Moreover, his testimony that he came across the discrepancies the following Monday in his routine checking of employees' weekly hours for payroll was also inconsistent with his affidavit. I further note that his testimony about his role in checking the pertinent payroll records conflicted with Becksted's account.

25 This brings up a significant flaw in the Respondent's presentation of its case. Alexander's direct supervisor, Jean DeShields, was not called as a witness even though both Sullivan and Becksted testified (albeit differently) that she played a role in the investigation of Alexander's timecard and how it compared with the time clock records. I would have expected DeShields to testify on her role in Alexander's investigation, 30 particularly when the Respondent's witnesses were inconsistent.

Similarly, Becksted testified that in early February, General Manager Evola told her that he had "just" learned that Kingsmore had been barred from BMW (an event that 35 occurred in August 2009, 6 months earlier) and that they discussed what to do, yet the Respondent did not have Evola testify either about the circumstances of how he learned or about his conversation with Becksted. Leaving aside Kingsmore's testimony, Supervisor Morris testified that he told Keller and Maintenance Supervisor Axel Zimmerman that day. Moreover, Becksted testified that when she called Keller in 40 Germany in February, Keller confirmed Kingsmore's testimony that on the day Kingsmore was barred, he called Keller and reported it. I would have expected Evola to testify about when and from whom he "just" learned of the BMW incident in February, especially in light of the timing of the investigation and disciplinary action vis-à-vis 45 Kingsmore's union activities.

The Respondent's failure to call DeShields or to elicit testimony from Evola on the above must be deemed to raise the suspicion that their testimony would not have corroborated Becksted and would have been unfavorable to the Respondent's case. I
50 therefore draw an adverse inference against the Respondent on these matters. See Palagonia Bakery Co., 339 NLRB 515, 538 (2003); Dalikichi Sushi, 335 NLRB 622, 622 (2001); International Automated Machines, 285 NLRB 1122, 1123 (1987), enf. mem 861 F.3d 730 (6th Cir. 1988).

5 I further note with regard to Becksted's testimony that although she provided a very detailed account of her suspension interview with Kingsmore on February 17 (and her subsequent conversations with him), she professed little recall of specifics about her discharge interview with Alexander, just 2 days later. I also find suspicious her testimony that she did not know the name or identity of the person at BMW with whom she allegedly spoke concerning Kingsmore, and purportedly could not recall if she even documented such conversation at all. I would expect that, as an experienced and trained HR manager at a facility employing over 100 hourly employees, she would have realized the importance of documenting any such conversation, especially when Kingsmore was on suspension and facing discharge.

15 In contrast to my reservations about Becksted's credibility, Managers/ Supervisors Blanton, Holt, Morris, O'Dell, and Weckerman appeared candid, they answered questions without any obvious attempt to slant the answers, and nothing in their testimony rang implausible. I will address Fink separately since his supervisory status is disputed.

20 Blanton indirectly supported Alexander's testimony that at a management meeting about the Union, certain employees threatened or implied violence against union supporters. Kingsmore testified that Blanton stated at such a group meeting, "[W]hat pisses me off is and I take personally is Gestamp came in here and bought us out, and the way we thank them is by calling the damn union."⁵ No other witnesses corroborated Kingsmore on this, and I seriously doubt that Blanton would have used such intemperate language. Accordingly, I do not credit Kingsmore on this point.

30 Fuller denied Alexander's testimony that they had a conversation about how other employees were treating Alexander or about the Union. The General Counsel does not allege that Fuller said anything violating Section 8(a)(1) and, in light of other credited testimony, I need not resolve this conflict.

35 Holt denied telling Kingsmore that Evola was firing employees because of their union activities, and I credit him. Kingsmore did not testify at all about such an alleged statement until cross-examination—an unfathomable omission on direct examination and an example of how he expanded his testimony as he went along. Moreover, nothing in the record reflects that anyone was fired at the time.

45 As noted earlier, Morris testified that he informed Keller and Zimmerman on the day that BMW barred Kingsmore. He also corroborated in part Alexander's testimony that antiunion employees had harassed him.

50 Weckerman denied Kingsmore's testimony that immediately after they left Kingsmore's suspension meeting, they engaged in a brief conversation during which Weckerman said, "[P]eople are telling Carmen [Evola] that you are the one that called the Union and he believe[d] them.”⁶ Weckerman testified that in their conversation, Evola was not mentioned. According to Weckerman, Kingsmore sua sponte stated that his suspension was due to people saying he was related to the Union, and Weckerman did not respond. Because Kingsmore equivocated on whether he or Weckerman brought up the Union in the conversation, and in light of my overall credibility determinations, I credit Weckerman’s account.

Fink struck me as truthful and reliable, a conclusion based both on his demeanor and on the substance of his testimony. In particular, he candidly described a conversation that he had with Kingsmore about the Union in January–February, and he readily answered my questions concerning his supervisory authority over two offsite Gestamp employees who work fulltime at BMW. I further take note that although Alexander testified that Fink made a comment to him in early February that demonstrated knowledge of Alexander’s union activities, the Respondent’s counsel did not elicit from Fink a denial or, indeed, any testimony, about such a remark. Thus, Alexander’s version went un rebutted, and I credit it.

To the extent that Beasley’s testimony was inconsistent with Fink’s in terms of their responsibilities and duties, I credit the latter. Finally, Gist, and Meese offered limited but generally credible testimony.

Facts

Based on the entire record, including testimony and my observations of witness demeanor, documents,⁷ and stipulations, as well as the thoughtful posttrial briefs that the General Counsel and the Respondent filed, I find the following.

The Respondent, a subsidiary of a company headquartered in Troy, Michigan, which in turn is a division of Gestamp Automocion in Spain, owns and operates a plant in Union, South Carolina (the facility). There, it assembles and presses large “Class A” motor vehicle parts, the large outer pieces of a vehicle that the consumer first sees (including doors, hood, and roof). The Respondent has admitted jurisdiction as alleged in the complaint, and I so find.

The Respondent purchased the facility from LSP effective October 1, 2009. It retained LSP’s employees and continued LSP’s personnel policies, including those set forth in the LSP employees’ handbook.⁸ The handbook provided, inter alia, that misleading or false statements made in an application form or during an interview would result in withdrawal of an offer of employment or in immediate dismissal (p. 11). The handbook also contained a provision (p. 25) setting out three steps of discipline: verbal warning, written warning, and termination, depending on the severity of behavior; stating that the Company could also utilize a fourth step of suspension without pay; and reserving the Company’s right, in its sole discretion, to determine the appropriate corrective action, including termination.

At the time of the Union's organizing efforts, in January–February, the Respondent employed approximately 100–110 hourly production employees and 35 salaried employees, including supervisors and engineers. The Respondent's sole customer was BMW, for which it made Class A parts for the BMW X6, a “crossover” or luxury vehicle. Most employees worked either the first (8 a.m.–4 p.m.) or second (4 p.m.–midnight) shifts. Only a small “skeleton” crew worked the third shift, midnight–8 a.m.

Alexander, hired by LSP in June 2007, was a supply coordinator on the first shift and responsible for taking care of parts and supplies that employees needed throughout the plant. He was the sole employee based in the tool crib or general storage area and spent about 80 percent of his working time there, the remainder in various areas of the facility. Alexander's supervisor was Logistics Manager Jean DeShields; however, Sullivan had the responsibility of timekeeping for her employees, as well as those he directly supervised. Alexander testified without controversion that prior to his termination, he received no written warnings or suspensions.

Kingsmore, whom LSP hired in May 2007, was a first-shift quality inspector. His job was to inspect body parts and inner body parts for defects or for any other problems that would keep them from passing BMW's standards. On a daily basis, he left his work station and went to other areas of the building to perform his duties. At times, another individual performed more detailed checks, and Kingsmore had a counterpart on the second shift. Keller was his supervisor until Michael Greene took over in that position shortly before Kingsmore's discharge. The Respondent's counsel represented that prior disciplines Kingsmore received played no part in his discharge.⁹

Fink's Status Under Section 2(11)

For purposes of this decision, Section 2(11) of the Act defines “supervisor” as an individual having authority, in the interest of the employer, to, inter alia, assign, reward, or responsibly direct other employees, or effectively to recommend such action, if the exercise of such authority is not merely routine or clerical in nature but requires the use of independent judgment. An individual need possess only one of these indicia. NLRB v. Yeshiva University, 444 U.S. 672, 682 fn. 13 (1980); Mountaineer Park, Inc., 343 NLRB 1473, 1474 (2004); Arlington Masonry Supply, Inc., 339 NLRB 817, 818 (2003).

Kingsmore testified that Fink regularly assigned him work and overtime and authorized his requests for time off. On the other hand, both Fink and Manager Weckerman, Keller's supervisor, testified to the contrary, stating that Fink had no supervisory authority over Kingsmore. Fink did testify that, once a month or so, at most, he instructed Kingsmore to perform certain work, after first consulting with Keller, and that, on occasion, he has signed off on an employee's request for vacation when Keller was on vacation or otherwise unavailable.

5 Fink was a more credible witness than Kingsmore, and I credit his corroborated testimony over Kingsmore's. I again note that according to both Kingsmore and Fink, Fink sometimes operated as something of an intermediary between Kingsmore and Keller, with whom Kingsmore had a difficult relationship, in part because of language issues.

10 As to Fink's occasionally substituting for Keller in granting requests for vacation leave, sporadic assumption of supervisory duties is insufficient to establish supervisory status at other times. See, e.g., Kanawha Stone Co., 334 NLRB 235, 237 (2001); Carlisle Engineered Products, 330 NLRB 1359, 1361 (2000). This same rationale would appear applicable to Fink's less-than-monthly instructions to Kingsmore to perform certain work. Moreover, nothing in the record reflects whether Fink sua sponte determined that Kingsmore should perform certain work or received requests for such from other employees or supervisors and then related them to Keller. In any event, the burden to show supervisory status is on the party asserting such. Loyalhanna Care Center, 352 NLRB 863, 865 (2008); Masterform Tool Co., 327 NLRB 1071, 1071 (1999). The General Counsel has not done so.

20 Accordingly, I find that Fink had no supervisory authority over any hourly employees in the plant. On the other hand, his testimony reflected his supervisory authority over the two Gestamp employees who work full-time off-site at BMW's plant in Greer, South Carolina: Christopher Coggins and Reginald Fleming. Thus, he gives them instructions, and if they have any problems, they report them to him or Beasley. 25 When they need to take off early, they inform him or Beasley. If they need time off for an emergency, they contact him or Beasley. In such situations, Fink gives initial approval; final approval is left to Weckerman, who has never disagreed with him. Fink and Beasley prepare their biannual evaluations and review their training reports, the results of which can impact on their getting raises; Weckerman has never disagreed with Fink's recommendations. Fink's authority to effectively recommend the performance evaluations of the two off-site employees, which affects their remuneration, is sufficient, standing alone, to establish supervisory status. As the Supreme Court articulated in Yeshiva University, above, at 683 fn. 17:

40 The statutory definition of "supervisor" expressly contemplates that those employees who "effectively . . . recommend" the enumerated actions are to be excluded as supervisory. 29 U.S.C. § 152(11). Consistent with the concern for divided loyalty, the relevant consideration is effective recommendation or control rather than final authority.

45 In Pepsi-Cola Co., 327 NLRB 1062, 1063 (1999), the Board stated, "The fact that the account representatives exercise their authority over employees who are not included in the bargaining unit does not preclude the Board from finding the account representatives to be statutory supervisors. Where the performance of supervisory functions is 'part and parcel of the individual's primary work product rather than an ancillary part of their duties,' the Board has found individuals to be statutory supervisors although they exercise such authority over nonunit personnel." See also Union Square Theatre Management, 326 NLRB 70, 72 (1998); Rite Aid Corp., 325 NLRB 717 (1998); Detroit College of Business, 296 NLRB 318, 320-321 (1989).

I recognize that the above cases pertain to whether an individual was eligible to join the bargaining unit or was precluded as a 2(11) supervisor. However, the same reasoning appears applicable to whether statements made by such an individual to rank-and-file employees are imputable to the employer. I am unaware of any Board decisions expressing the doctrine that an individual can be found a statutory supervisor for some purposes but not for others. In other words, whether an individual is or is not a statutory supervisor is an all-or-nothing proposition, and holding otherwise would be anomalous.

I find, based on Fink's testimony, that Fink's supervision of Coggins and Fleming is an important component of his primary work responsibilities, particularly in light of the dependence of Gestamp on BMW. Accordingly, I conclude that Fink has been a statutory supervisor over the Respondent's employees at the BMW plant. Ergo, I further conclude that his statements to employees at the facility, including Alexander and Kingsmore, were imputable to the Respondent.

Union Organizing Activity

In late December 2009, Kingsmore initiated contact with the Union in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, concerning organizing the facility's hourly employees.¹⁰ The Union assigned Rigsby to follow up with him. Rigsby's first contacts were with Kingsmore and Stewart. The Union's strategy, conveyed to Alexander, Kingsmore, and other employees, was to keep organizing efforts from the Company's knowledge.

Alexander and Kingsmore were among the seven or eight employees on the organizing committee that Rigsby formed. Rigsby held approximately four meetings of employees in late January and early February, three at a hotel in Union, South Carolina, and one in an apartment. Alexander and Rigsby attended all but one of them. Alexander was vocal at these meetings. After the last of the meetings, in mid-February, the Union decided to discontinue its organizing efforts.

Both Alexander and Kingsmore spoke to other employees about supporting the Union after work, on breaks, and during and after lunch times.

In January–February, management became aware of the Union's organizing efforts because of the many questions that employees were asking on the subject,¹¹ and Evola heard of such activity on or before February 1.¹²

In approximately early February, Kingsmore had conversations concerning the Union with Fink and Sullivan, as follows.¹³

At his work area, Kingsmore told Fink that he was going to try to unionize the plant. Fink warned him to be careful because if Evola found out, “[Y]ou’re gone.”¹⁴ As noted earlier, Fink recalled that Kingsmore initiated a conversation about the Union but could not recall the specifics, and both of them offered testimony demonstrating why Kingsmore would have considered Fink something of a confidant.

Kingsmore spoke to Sullivan in the smoking dock area. He asked Sullivan what he thought about the Union. Sullivan replied that it was good for employees and bad for management and talked about his experiences working in union plants and the pro’s and con’s of union representation. Kingsmore said that he was going to try to get the Union in. Kingsmore credibly testified that he had this conversation with Sullivan because he considered him sympathetic. I again note Sullivan’s unreliability as a witness.

10

Shortly thereafter, Kingsmore spoke to Sullivan before the latter was scheduled to attend a meeting with the Company’s legal counsel concerning the Union. Sullivan stated that if Kingsmore had anything to say to him about the Union, to say it then because after the meeting, Sullivan would no longer be able to talk to him on the subject.

It is undisputed that Kingsmore later called Evola and told him that rumors that Kingsmore was for the Union were false. At the time, Evola testified, he had not heard any such rumors “other than discussions with my attorneys.”¹⁵

25

In early to mid-February, management, through Evola or Blanton, conducted group meetings with approximately 20 employees each, explaining the Respondent’s perspective regarding unionization. The General Counsel has not alleged that anything Evola or Blanton said violated the Act.

30

Alexander and Meese attended one of Evola’s meetings, on about February 11,¹⁶ and Kingsmore one that Blanton led on about that same date. Statements that other employees made at and after those meetings reflect how divisive the issue of unionization was among them and the maelstrom of emotion generated.

35

Kingsmore testified that at the meeting he attended, an employee asked who had called the Union. Blanton replied that it did not matter, and the employee said that when they found out, “[W]e’re going to catch him in the parking lot and whip his ass.”¹⁷ Although Blanton did not recall any employees making threats at that meeting, he did recollect stating, “[T]here’s no place for that. We need to make sure that that doesn’t happen.”¹⁸ These remarks would naturally follow the making of a threat or suggestion of violence or other illegal retaliation against union supporters, thereby indirectly corroborating Kingsmore’s testimony, which I therefore credit.

40

¹⁶ The date is based on Alexander’s testimony; the Respondent provided no documents or other evidence of another specific date of the meeting.

50

¹⁸ Tr. 777.

At the meeting Alexander attended, Meese and other employees made remarks about the effects on employees if the Union came in, including a possible shutdown. After the meeting, Alexander returned to his work station. Soon afterward, three employees came over, two together and one separately, and accused him of being one of those trying to bring in the Union. Alexander named Gist as one of them. Although Gist put the time of their conversation as shortly after he and Alexander arrived to work, he did recall approaching Alexander and stating that he had overheard that Alexander might have something to do with the Union.

In part because Morris corroborated Alexander's version of what occurred, I credit Alexander. However, in any event, Gist's account is not necessarily inconsistent with Alexander's as far as substance and similarly reflects suspicions among employees that Alexander was one of the chief union supporters.

Later that day, Alexander testified, he had a conversation with Morris in the tool crib in which he related the accusations that the three employees had made against him. Morris asked if they were causing a hostile work environment, and Alexander replied that he did not know. Morris' account was quite similar. He recalled a conversation in the tool crib that they had after he observed Alexander appearing quite upset. He asked Alexander why he was so bothered, and Alexander answered that "his coworkers were harassing him about this 'union stuff.'"¹⁹ Morris asked if he was being harassed, and he said no. Morris reminded him of the Company's antiharassment policy and that Morris had an open door at all times.

I credit Alexander's un rebutted testimony that following the conversation with Morris, Fink came by the tool crib and made the comment, "I didn't know you were one of the ones that was trying to bring the Union in."²⁰ Alexander did not respond. Another employee, whose identity Alexander could not recall, was in the vicinity.

Alexander further testified that on the day he was discharged, February 19, he brought the subject up again with Fuller. According to Alexander, as Fuller walked by the tool crib, they exchanged greetings, after which Alexander injected, "I've had three different people come up to me, talking to me about my union activity."²¹ Fuller simply replied that he would get back to him.

Fuller denied ever having such a conversation. My problem with Alexander's version concerns the date he gave—a week after the incident occurred—and the absence of an explanation of why he would have abruptly interjected the subject at that time. Possibly, Alexander did make the statement to Fuller but was mistaken as to the date and circumstances. Regardless, the version that Alexander set out was implausible, and I do not credit it.

Review of Alexander's February 9 Time Records

Alexander, Becksted, Harper, and Sullivan all testified that it was normal procedure at Gestamp for hourly employees to create weekly self-prepared timesheets detailing their start times, end times, and total hours, and to submit them to their supervisors. All further testified that employees also “swiped” in and out of an electronic time system upon arrival and departure, thereby creating an electronic timecard report that supervisors used to verify the reporting on the timesheets. This system of dual timekeeping began in December 2009, and Harper testified that through February employees were paid according to their timesheets, which supervisors normally turned in to Harper by 5 p.m. on Mondays. As previously stated, Sullivan handled timekeeping for DeShield’s employees, including Alexander.

During the week of February 8, Alexander arrived late on two occasions, February 9 and 10.²² He maintained a preprepared template on his computer with 7 a.m. start times for his timesheet. Most likely on Friday, February 12, he changed his start time for February 10 to reflect his late arrival at 7:15 a.m. but neglected to do so to reflect his late arrival at 7:38 a.m. on February 9. Alexander had no record of timesheet-cheating or any other dishonest conduct, and I find it quite unlikely that he would have deliberately falsified his timesheet, knowing that Sullivan weekly checked his timesheet against the electronic records. I therefore credit Alexander’s testimony that he did not deliberately seek to steal 38 minutes of time but instead simply forgot to make the change.

On the morning of February 9, two hourly employees whom Sullivan directly supervised, Melvernia Jeter and Dean Tollison, asked whether Alexander had a new start time after they observed him arrive late.²³

Sullivan’s account of his subsequent actions conflicted with his affidavit. He testified that their comment did not lead him to inquire into Alexander’s timesheet and that he came upon Alexander’s timecard 6 days later, in the usual course of business of checking timecards for all logistics department employees. Similarly, he testified that their comment did not cause him to handle Alexander’s timecard any differently. However, in his affidavit, he stated that their remark triggered his investigation into Alexander’s timesheet.

In any event, when Sullivan compared Alexander’s electronic timecard²⁴ to the timesheet Alexander submitted, he noticed the discrepancy between the 7 a.m. start time in the timesheet and the 7:38 a.m. start time reported by the electronic timecard system for February 9. He advised Alexander of this discrepancy when Alexander came to his office to request a vacation day. Alexander insisted that if he wrote 7 a.m., then 7 a.m. was correct. Alexander testified that Sullivan responded, “Well, I’ll fix it this time. Be more careful about your time.”²⁵ Sullivan denied ever having any conversation with Alexander about the discrepancy—testimony directly contradicted by Sullivan’s affidavit and by Tollison’s, account that he witnessed Sullivan and Alexander discuss the electronic time clock in Sullivan’s office. In light of Sullivan’s impeachment on this point and his general unreliability, I credit all of Alexander’s testimony regarding this conversation and find that Sullivan promised to fix the discrepancy. Prior to Alexander’s termination meeting, no one from management ever again mentioned the matter to Alexander.

²² See GC Exh. 2, his timesheet for the week.

²³ I credit Sullivan on this. His testimony comported with statements in his affidavit, GC Exh. 11, and Tollison testified that he did not remember and therefore did not controvert Sullivan’s version.

Because Sullivan and Becksted offered different accounts of DeShields’ involvement in the investigation of Alexander’s time records, and the Respondent did not call DeShields as a witness, I am not satisfied that the Respondent provided a full and accurate account of what subsequently transpired. Suffice to say, Sullivan, on February 15, corrected the timesheet by striking out the 7 a.m. start time and manually writing in 7:38 a.m. above it, and correspondingly adjusted the total hours for the day from 8 hours to 7.12 hours. These corrections were made before Alexander’s timesheet for the week went to payroll, and he was in fact paid for only the actual hours that he worked.

Becksted testified that after she confirmed the discrepancy with DeShields, she brought the matter to Evola’s attention. However, she did not describe the conversation on the record, and Evola offered no testimony thereon.

I credit the following testimony of Alexander over Sullivan’s denial. On two earlier occasions, both about 3 months before Alexander’s termination, Sullivan corrected his timesheets. In both instances, they concerned Alexander’s inadvertent failure to put in dates. I note that Sullivan admitted to correcting other employees’ timesheets on occasions when the electronic time system was not working properly.

Alexander’s Discharge on February 19, 2010

Becksted conducted a termination meeting with Alexander on the afternoon of February 19, in Fuller’s office. Fuller and DeShields were also present. Fuller testified that he played no part in the decision to discharge Alexander and attended solely as a witness. Becksted began by describing the time discrepancy on February 9 between the 7 a.m. self-reported start time and the 7:38 a.m. start time shown by the electronic timecard. Alexander replied that he had discussed the problem with Sullivan, who had promised to fix it. Fuller interjected that he had no knowledge of that. Becksted stated that Alexander had violated company policy and was immediately terminated for falsifying his timesheet.

Kingsmore’s Suspension on February 17

Before coming to LSP, Kingsmore was employed at BMW from August 9, 1999 to May 21, 2007.²⁶ His employment application for LSP was blank as far as previous employment,²⁷ and he did not fill out a new application when Gestamp assumed control of the facility.

5 In August 2009 (the exact date is unknown), while the plant was still under LSP ownership, both Kingsmore and Supervisor Morris were scheduled to take a tour of BMW's Geer, South Carolina plant. Morris was allowed entry, but Kingsmore was denied entrance. BMW representatives gave neither him nor Morris any reason for this bar. Morris proceeded to go on with the tour, which lasted 2 to 3 hours. Afterward, he 10 returned to the LSP plant and informed both his own supervisor, Axel Zimmerman, and Kingsmore's supervisor, Keller, that Kingsmore was denied access. Immediately after being barred, Kingsmore called Keller from the BMW parking lot and informed him of what had occurred. When Becksted spoke with Keller in February, he confirmed that Kingsmore had called him in August 2009 and stated that he had been denied access 15 into the BMW plant.

20 Kingsmore testified, in considerable detail, that as soon as he returned to LSP that day, he went into Evola's office and told Evola that guards at BMW had refused to allow him to enter the plant. Per Kingsmore, "I went to Carmen's office, and I said they wouldn't let me in. And he said I don't know what I was thinking. He said I knew they wasn't [sic] going to let you in; you used to work there. I said yes, sir. He said, well, I'm sorry I wasted your time. I said, no, you didn't waste my time. I said I've been on the clock."²⁸ Kingsmore's account of informing Evola remained substantively consistent 25 throughout his testimony.

30 Evola directly contradicted this account, testifying both that he and Kingsmore never had any conversations about Kingsmore's inability to enter BMW and that in August 2009, he had no knowledge that Kingsmore was barred from BMW. In this regard, Becksted testified that Evola approached her in early February and told her that he had "just" learned that Kingsmore had been barred from BMW.²⁹ She could not recall what he said about who informed him. The Respondent's failure to have Evola testify about how and when he learned that Kingsmore was barred from BMW (or concerning his conversation with Becksted) raises the suspicion that Evola's testimony 35 on when he learned of the bar would have been unfavorable to the Respondent's case.
I therefore draw an adverse inference against the Respondent on the matter and credit Kingsmore's testimony that he told Evola in August 2009.

40 On September 2, 2009, Kingsmore applied internally for promotion to a quality supervisor position, for which Becksted and Weckerman interviewed him on September 29, 2009. In the course thereof, Becksted asked why he had left BMW. He replied that he was tired of the long commute and being away from his family. She did not specifically ask if his separation from BMW was voluntary or involuntary, and nothing in 45 either her interview summary or Kingsmore's internal job application addresses this point.³⁰ Kingsmore's ability to access the BMW plant was never mentioned. Kingsmore did not receive the promotion.

50 ²⁸ Tr. 472.

³⁰ See R. Exh. 14.

5 Becksted testified as follows. In early February, Evola called her into his office and stated that he had just learned that Kingsmore was banned from BMW. Becksted was startled because she believed that Kingsmore had told her in the interview that he left BMW voluntarily, and she found it inconsistent that someone could both leave BMW voluntarily and be banned from the plant. She was also concerned because Gestamp employees need to be able to go to BMW, as Gestamp's only client. She expressed those concerns to Evola, who instructed her to investigate fully the reasons why Kingsmore left BMW and why he was banned from their premises. Next, she called Keller, who was in Germany. He told her that Kingsmore advised him of the ban in 10 August 2009. Becksted then returned to Evola, described her conversation with Keller, and said that she planned to call Kingsmore into a meeting to ask him face-to-face whether or not he had left BMW voluntarily and whether or not he was in fact banned.

15 On February 17, Becksted met with Kingsmore and Weckerman in the latter's office. Weckerman played no role in the decision to suspend Kingsmore. In that meeting, Kingsmore stated that he left BMW on a voluntary basis because of the long drive and his desire to spend more time with his family. When Becksted said that she learned Kingsmore was barred from BMW, he did not deny it. She stated that she 20 would need additional information about why he was banned from BMW's premises and asked him to sign a release form authorizing her to get information directly from BMW.³¹ Kingsmore hesitated, stating that he did not understand what the document was. He asked what would happen if he did not sign, and she replied that he could be 25 terminated. Kingsmore signed the release and asked for a copy.

30 Becksted left to confer with Evola. They agreed that Kingsmore should not receive a copy of the release because it was an internal company document. She returned to Weckerman's office and so informed Kingsmore. She told him that he was suspended with pay, effective immediately, and that during his suspension he was not allowed to enter the Respondent's premises or communicate with other employees because it would interfere with the investigation.

35 Weckerman went with Kingsmore to retrieve his personal items and then to the front door to exit the facility. At the breezeway near the exit, they engaged in a brief conversation. Kingsmore stated that he believed his suspension was due to the Union. Weckerman replied that he did not know about that.

40 Kingsmore's Discharge on February 24

45 On the day of the suspension, February 17, Becksted sent the release to BMW, to which she received no response. As a result, within 2 business days following Kingsmore's suspension, she called BMW. A man there stated that he would not give her any information regarding Kingsmore's employment at BMW. By her own admission, the conversation lasted mere "seconds."³² Becksted testified, incredibly, that she could not recall if she made any kind of notation of the phone call, and she could not provide a specific time and date or the name and title of this BMW employee.³³ If a memorandum was in fact made, it was not offered in evidence.

50 _____

5 Various witnesses of the Respondent testified to the need of Gestamp employees to visit the BMW plant, the Respondent's sole customer at times relevant.
They take tours of the BMW plant and may be required to go there when BMW requests 10 assistance or when the two on-site Gestamp employees are off. Becksted testified that quality department supervisors visit the BMW plant on a regular basis, consistent with Holt's testimony that he has gone there three or four times. Regarding what his reaction would be on learning that an employee was refused access to the BMW plant, Evola 15 stated, "I'm 100 percent certain there's no way as a leader in the company that an associate could come to me with such dramatic news and me not take any action whatsoever."³⁴ However, the Respondent's counsel represented that Kingsmore's inability to enter the BMW plant per se played no part in his suspension or discharge, and that "misrepresentation and failure to provide information" were the sole bases for his discipline.³⁵

20 On the morning of Monday, February 22, Becksted called Kingsmore and stated that she had been unable to get any detailed information from BMW on why he had left.
She advised Kingsmore that he was now responsible for getting information from BMW that would clearly state why, by 5 p.m. on Wednesday, February 24. Kingsmore replied 25 that he would do his best. I credit his un rebutted testimony that he denied her suggestions that he had been fired from BMW.

Kingsmore called BMW HR. Several representatives told him that BMW would provide only a verification of the dates of his employment. Upon receiving a letter 30 stating such on February 24, Kingsmore faxed it to Becksted at 3:53 p.m., along with an explanation that this was the only information he could obtain.³⁶ After receiving the fax that afternoon, Becksted called Kingsmore. She said that this was not the information she had requested and that he was terminated.

35 At trial, I admitted, over the Respondent's objections, two documents going to the issue of Kingsmore's separation from BMW. The first is General Counsel's Exhibit 9, on its face a BMW document dated May 21, 2007 stating that Kingsmore voluntarily resigned his employment. The second is General Counsel's Exhibit 15, a December 10 40 e-mail to the Region from Steve Warren, BMW's attorney, confirming that a document of resignation signed by Kingsmore is contained in BMW's files. Because neither of these documents were available to any of the parties at the time of Kingsmore's suspension or termination, they cannot have a bearing on deciding the Respondent's motivation for those actions. Whether Kingsmore's separation from BMW was a resignation, 45 resignation in lieu of discharge, or a discharge is not an issue before me.

³³ More precisely, she professed not to recall if she made any kind of record thereof (Tr.
50 936), testimony that is even more incredible and damaging to her credibility.

Other Instances of Discipline by the Respondent

5 The Respondent presented testimony regarding the discharge of two other employees for first offenses. One was Ron Gist, who was terminated within a month before trial, for failing to report a forklift accident in accordance with Gestamp's accident policy. Becksted terminated him immediately after she conducted a full investigation, which found him responsible, and he admitted culpability. The second was William Gregory, for sanding words into vehicle sides, considered destruction of company property. A department supervisor brought the matter to Becksted's attention. After an investigation and Gregory's admission, Becksted immediately terminated him. The Respondent provided no date for his discharge.

15 The Respondent also submitted former employee Joseph Hicks' timesheet for the week of April 12, and a determination by the South Carolina Employment Security Commission that he had been allowed to resign in lieu of discharge.³⁷ However, the Respondent failed to elicit any testimony regarding the circumstances of his separation, and Becksted could not say when it occurred. I am therefore unable to ascertain how similar or dissimilar his situation was vis-à-vis Alexander's.

Analysis and Conclusions

25 The General Counsel alleges that the Respondent discharged Alexander and suspended and discharged Kingsmore in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

30 The framework for analyzing alleged violations of Section 8(a)(3) is Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083 (1980), enfd. 662 F.2d 899 (1st Cir. 1981), cert. denied 455 U.S. 989 (1982). Under Wright Line, the General Counsel must make a prima facie showing sufficient to support an inference that the employee's protected conduct motivated an employer's adverse action. The General Counsel must show, either by direct or circumstantial evidence, that the employee engaged in protected conduct, the employer knew or suspected the employee engaged in such conduct, the employer harbored animus, and the employer took action because of this animus.

40 Under the Wright Line framework, if the General Counsel makes a prima facie case of discriminatory conduct, it meets its initial burden to persuade, by a preponderance of the evidence, that protected activity was a motivating factor in the employer's action. Once this is established, the burden of persuasion shifts to the employer to show that it would have taken the same adverse action even in absence of the protected activity. NLRB v. Transportation Corp., 462 U.S. 393, 399, 403 (1983); Kamtech, Inc. v. NLRB, 314 F.3d 800, 811 (6th Cir. 2002); Manno Electric, 321 NLRB 278, 280 fn. 12 (1996), enfd. 127 F.3d 34 (5th Cir. 1997) (per curiam). To meet this burden, "an employer cannot simply present a legitimate reason for its action but must persuade by a preponderance of the evidence that the same action would have taken place even in the absence of the protected conduct." Serrano Painting, 332 NLRB 1363, 1366 (2000), citing Roure Bertrand Dupont, Inc., 271 NLRB 443 (1984).

5 If the employer's proffered defenses are found to be a pretext, i.e., the reasons given for the employer's actions are either false or not, in fact, relied on, the employer fails by definition to show that it would have taken the same action for those reasons, and there is no need to perform the second part of the Wright Line analysis. On the other hand, further analysis is required if the defense is one of "dual motivation," that is, the employer defends that, even if an invalid reason might have played some part in the employer's motivation, the employer would have taken the same action against the employee for permissible reasons. Palace Sports & Entertainment, Inc. v. NLRB, 411 F.3d 212, 223 (D.C. Cir. 2005).

10 The initial question is whether Alexander's and Kingsmore's actions qualify as protected, concerted activity under Section 7 of the Act. I find that the General Counsel has established this element inasmuch as Alexander and Kingsmore actively participated in a union-organizing campaign. More specifically, Kingsmore initiated contact with the Union, he and Alexander were on the organizing committee that Rigsby formed, and they attended several union-sponsored meetings for employees at which Alexander was vocal. In addition, both solicited support for the Union from other employees after work, on breaks, and during and after lunch times.

15 Secondly, I conclude that Respondent knew of their union activities—several members of management/supervision had direct knowledge, as follows. Alexander communicated to Supervisor Morris that "his coworkers were harassing him about this "union stuff,"" and Supervisor Fink stated that he had heard of Alexander's involvement in seeking to bring in the Union. Kingsmore told Supervisors Fink and Sullivan that he was trying to get the Union in.

20 It is well-established that a supervisor's knowledge of union activities is imputed to the employer unless credited testimony establishes the contrary. State Plaza, Inc., 347 NLRB 755, 756-757 (2006); Dobbs International Services, 335 NLRB 972, 973 (2001); Dr. Phillip Megdal, D.D.S., Inc., 267 NLRB 82, 82 (1983).

25 The Respondent chose not to have Evola testify as to whether he had knowledge of Alexander or Kingsmore's union activity at the time of their suspension/terminations, so there is no credited testimony denying that Morris, Sullivan, or Fink transmitted their knowledge to Evola. He did testify that he believed Kingsmore when Kingsmore called and assured him that rumors of Kingsmore's union activity were untrue.³⁸ However, even if so, this was not tantamount to testimony that he had no knowledge of Kingsmore's union activities at the time Kingsmore was suspended and then discharged. I further note Evola's testimony that at the time of this conversation, he had not heard any rumors about Kingsmore trying to bring in the Union, "other than discussions with my attorneys."

30 The Respondent argues (R. Br. at 22) that none of the "decisionmaking supervisors" involved in the decision to discharge Alexander or the decisions to suspend and discharge Kingsmore were aware of either's union activities, and (R. Br. at 28) that Becksted made the decisions.

38 Tr. 735.

5 True, the record remains unclear on who made the decisions, but this is because Evola did not testify whether he did or did not play a role therein and, contrary to the Respondent's contention, Becksted did not specifically testify that she made them or who else did. Inasmuch as Becksted admittedly consulted with Evola on whether to 10 investigate Kingsmore and, later, whether she should give Kingsmore a copy of the release he signed, I must doubt whether she would have not also have consulted with him about the far more drastic measure of discharging employees. Ultimately, the Respondent bears the responsibility for the insufficiency of the record evidence on who made the decisions, and I will not reward the Respondent with any favorable inferences.

15 Assuming arguendo that I accepted the Respondent's argument that supervisors' knowledge should not be imputed to Gestamp's management, the element of knowledge can be satisfied by reasonable inference. Windsor Convalescent Center of North Long Beach, 351 NLRB 975, 983 fn. 36 (2007), enfd. in relevant part, 570 F.3d 354 (D.C. Cir. 2009). See also Active Transportation, 296 NLRB 431, 431-432 (1989), enfd. 924 F.2d 1057 (6th Cir. 1991) (knowledge inferred where, inter alia, three of four discharged employees engaged in union activities in the presence of employee who was an informer for the employer); Clark & Wilkins Industries, 290 NLRB 106, 106 (1988), enfd. 887 F.2d 308 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied 495 U.S. 934 (1990) (imputing supervisor's knowledge to employer where supervisor observed organizing campaign in small shop).

25 Here, the union campaign clearly created a highly-charged atmosphere that engendered widespread sentiments among employees, both for and against the Union. This is best reflected in the threat of physical violence that an employee made against union supporters at a management-conducted meeting, and the accusations that three employees leveled against Alexander. In these circumstances, it is reasonable to 30 believe that other employees reported Alexander's and Kingsmore's union activities to management.

35 The General Counsel's final burden under Wright Line is to show that the Respondent harbored antiunion animus and took discriminatory action because of this animus.

40 The only direct evidence of animus is Supervisor Fink's warning to Kingsmore that, "You're gone" if Evola found out that he was trying to unionize the plant. Nevertheless, inferences of animus and discriminatory motivation can be warranted under all the circumstances of a case, even in the absence of direct evidence. Fluor Daniel, Inc., 304 NLRB 970, 970 (1991), enfd. 976 F.2d 744 (11th Cir. 1992); Electronic Data Systems Corp., 305 NLRB 219, 219 (1991), enfd. in relevant part 985 F.2d 801, 805 (5th Cir. 1993).

45 The timing of the Respondent's actions raises a bright red flag, especially as to Kingsmore. Evola and Supervisors Keller, Morris, and Zimmerman all knew in August 2009 that he was barred from entering BMW's plant, but no one from management or supervision again mentioned the subject to Kingsmore until his suspension meeting with 50 Becksted on February 17. Thus, the Respondent had knowledge of Kingsmore's ban from entering BMW's plant for over 6 months yet took no action whatsoever until only

5 weeks after he first engaged in union activities. Alexander, too, was discharged just weeks after he began engaging in union activities. Adverse action occurring shortly after an employee has engaged in protected activity raises an inference of unlawful motive. State Plaza, Inc., above at 756; La Gloria Oil & Gas Co., 337 NLRB 1120 (2002), enfd. 71 Fed. Appx. 441 (5th Cir. 2003).

10 So does the severity of the discipline that the Respondent imposed in proportion to the offenses. See Detroit Paneling Systems, Inc., 330 NLRB 1170, 1170 (2000); KNTV, 319 NLRB 447, 452 (1995). Alexander and Kingsmore were the first instances of the Respondent immediately discharging an employee for alleged timesheet falsification or the falsification of prior work history.

15 The Respondent represents Gist and Gregory as other employees terminated for first offenses in similar circumstances (R. Br. at 27–28). However, those situations were distinguishable in that they involved physical damage to company property: Gist was terminated for failing to report a forklift accident and Gregory for deliberately vandalizing a vehicle. In contrast, Alexander’s timesheet discrepancy and anything that Kingsmore said in the interview for a supervisory position resulted in no harm to the Respondent whatsoever. Thus, Alexander’s error was caught prior to his pay being submitted to payroll, and he received only the remuneration to which he was entitled for the day in question. Even crediting Becksted, Kingsmore’s reason for leaving BMW came up as an issue only as a result of his interview for a promotion that he did not receive. I again note the Respondent’s counsel’s representation that the Respondent discharged Kingsmore solely for misrepresentation and failure to provide information, not because he was barred from BMW. Additionally, both Gist and Gregory admitted to the misconduct, a factor not present here. Significantly, the Respondent did not have affirmative evidence that either Alexander deliberately falsified his timecard or Kingsmore his employment history but instead chose to paint their conduct in the worst light possible.

35 This brings up another factor that leads to the inference of animus and constitutes evidence of discriminatory intent against Alexander and Kingsmore: the Respondent’s failure to conduct full and fair investigations. See Hewlett Packard Co., 341 NLRB 492, 492 fn. 2 (2004); Firestone Textile Co., 203 NLRB 89, 95 (1973).

40 Becksted never spoke to Alexander at all prior to his discharge. By her own testimony, she simply looked at the paperwork, decided that Alexander had deliberately lied on his timesheet, and terminated him. Both employees and management were well aware that an electronic system was in place to monitor attendance, and that supervisors compared self-prepared and electronic records, yet Becksted presumably concluded that Alexander deliberately sought to cheat the Respondent out of 38 minutes of work time without first inquiring as to whether he had an alternate explanation for the discrepancy. The Respondent’s willingness to discharge Alexander without even interviewing him or affording him an opportunity to defend against the serious accusation of deliberate falsification is evidence that the Respondent’s true motivation was Alexander’s protected activities. See Joseph Chevrolet, Inc., 343 NLRB 7, 8 (2004); Tubular Corp. of America, 3347 NLRB 99, 99 (2001).

Turning to Kingsmore, Becksted, an experienced and trained HR manager, allegedly could not recall if she even documented the conversation she had with a BMW HR representative concerning Kingsmore's employment, and the Respondent produced nothing that memorialized it. This, along with her apparent satisfaction with a 5 conversation that lasted mere seconds, strongly suggests that her investigation lacked diligence and a genuine desire to ascertain the truth. This conclusion is bolstered by the very short timeframe that she gave Kingsmore to obtain documentary evidence of his separation from BMW, and the absence of any showing of why the Respondent
10 needed it so immediately.

Still another basis for inferring animus is that the Respondent discharged Alexander and Kingsmore, rather than imposing lesser penalties as per the Respondent's progressive discipline system. An employer's failure to follow such a 15 system is frequently indicative of a hidden motive for the imposition of more severe discipline. Fayette Cotton Mill, 245 NLRB 428 (1978); Keller Mfg. Co., 237 NLRB 713, 713-714 (1978). This proposition appears particularly apropos to the instant matter because both were employees of long tenure, Alexander had never previously been 20 disciplined for any reason, and the Respondent relied on nothing in Kingsmore's prior disciplinary record in making the decision to terminate him.

Finally, animus can be inferred from the Respondent's shifting rationales for disciplining Kingsmore. Becksted testified that Evola asked her to investigate both why
25 Kingsmore left BMW and why he was banned from entering BMW's premises. However, the Respondent provided no evidence that it ever specifically asked Kingsmore why he was not allowed into BMW's plant, or attempted to obtain such information from BMW. In Kingsmore's employee separation checklist, three reasons
30 are stated for his termination: "Falsification of prior work history, not supplying proper documentation from prior employer as requested and not supplying information for reason of BMW's refusal to allow employee on property."³⁹ Although the Respondent elicited considerable testimony on the importance of an employee's need for entry into the BMW plant, the Respondent's counsel expressly represented that Kingsmore's bar
35 from entering BMW was not one of the reasons for his discharge.

Such shifting of rationales is evidence that the Respondent's proffered reasons for discharging Kingsmore are pretextual. See Approved Electric Corp., 356 NLRB No. 45 (2010) (citing City Stationery, Inc., 340 NLRB 523, 524 (2003) (nondiscriminatory 40 reasons for discharge offered at the hearing were found to be pretextual where different from those set forth in the discharge letters); GATX Logistics, Inc., 323 NLRB 328, 335 (1997) ("Where . . . an employer provides inconsistent or shifting reasons for its actions, a reasonable inference can be drawn that the reasons proffered are mere pretexts 45 designed to mask an unlawful motive.")).

Considering all of the above factors, I conclude that the General Counsel has established the last elements, of animus and of actions based thereon, and thus has met his initial burden of persuasion under Wright Line.

³⁹ GC Exh. 7.

I now turn to the Respondent's burden under Wright Line to show that it would have taken the same action in the absence of that protected activity. The Respondent has represented that Alexander's timesheet falsification was the sole reason for his discharge and that Kingsmore's misrepresentation and failure to provide information of prior work history were the sole bases for his suspension and discharge. Based on the same factors that have led me to find inferred animus, I conclude that these proffered reasons were mere pretexts and that antiunion animus motivated the Respondent's actions. Accordingly, no further analysis of the Respondent's defenses is necessary for, as the Board stated in Rood Trucking Co., 342 NLRB 895, 898 (2004):

A finding of pretext defeats any attempt by the Respondent to show that it would have discharged the discriminatees absent their union activities. This is because where 'the evidence establishes that the reasons given for the Respondent's actions are pretextual—that is, either false or not in fact relied upon—the Respondent fails by definition to show that it would have taken the same action for those reasons, absent the protected conduct, and thus there is no need to perform the second part of the Wright Line analysis.' Golden State Foods Corp., 340 NLRB 382, 385 (2003). . . .

See also SPO Good-Nite Inn, LLC, above.

Accordingly, I conclude that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by discharging Alexander and by suspending and then discharging Kingsmore.

Alleged 8(a)(1) Violations

A statement from an employer is an unlawful threat under Section 8(a)(1) if it interferes with, restrains, or coerces employees in the exercise of their Section 7 rights. 29 U.S.C. § 158(a).

The General Counsel contends that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) in about early February, when Supervisor Fink unlawfully threatened Kingsmore with discharge for his union activities, and separately on February 11, when Fink unlawfully interrogated Alexander concerning his union activities.

In approximately early February, Kingsmore told Fink that he was going to try to unionize the plant and Fink warned him to be careful because if Evola found out, "You're gone."

Clearly, Kingsmore initiated the conversation and viewed Fink as a confidant due to Fink's role in protecting him from Keller's aggressiveness. Nevertheless, the level of trust between them is not pivotal in assessing Fink's statement. Rather, "[T]he Board does not consider subjective reactions, but rather whether, under all the circumstances, a respondent's remarks reasonably tended to restrain, coerce, or interfere with employees' rights guaranteed under the Act." Sage Dining Service, 312 NLRB 845, 846 (1993). Fink's statement reasonably conveyed the message that Kingsmore's protected activities might harm his employment and thus reasonably could have caused Kingsmore to fear reprisals for engaging in protected activities.

5 The Respondent references (R. Br. at 41) Rogers Electric, Inc., 346 NLRB 508, 509 (2006), in arguing that Fink's statement was merely a matter of opinion and therefore protected by the free speech provisions of Section 8(c) as an "intemperate expression of personal opinion." Such an argument mischaracterizes the type of expressions to which the Rogers Electric holding applies. Under that decision and related precedent, Section 8(c) protects as free speech an employer's and its agents' flip and intemperate statements disparaging a union as futile, violent, or of other impugned character. See, e.g., Children's Center for Behavioral Development, 347 NLRB 35, 35 (2006) (if unaccompanied by threats or promises of benefit, employer may "criticize, disparage, or denigrate a union"); Miller Industries Towing Equipment, Inc., 342 NLRB 1074, 1076 (2004) (employer may offer his "perspective" against union so long as it is not accompanied by threats). In contrast, Fink's statement predicted retaliation against Kingsmore if management learned of his protected activities. Thus, the Rogers Electric holding is inapposite.

10 Accordingly, I conclude that Fink's statement was an unlawful threat within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1).

20 On February 11, Fink approached Alexander in the tool crib and made the comment, "I didn't know you were one of the ones who's trying to bring the Union in." Asking an employee about his or her knowledge of union activities may, depending on the totality of the circumstances, reasonably tend to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of Section 7 rights. Blue Flash Express, 109 NLRB 591, 592-595 (1954); see also Michigan Roads Maintenance Co., 344 NLRB 617 (2005), citing Donaldson Bros. Ready Mix, 341 NLRB 958, 959 (2004). Circumstances considered in evaluating the tendency to interfere include the (1) background, (2) the nature of the information sought, (3) the identity of the questioner, and (4) the place and method of the interrogation. Sunnyvale Medical Clinic, 277 NLRB 1217, 1218 (1985); Rossmore House, 269 NLRB 1176, 1178 fn. 20 (1984).

30 Both Fink and Kingsmore testified to Fink's role in the workplace as something of a mediator between rank-and-file employees and their foreign-speaking managers, in that employees confided to Fink that they were being mistreated. Although a supervisor, Fink was not a senior manager within the company hierarchy, and his supervisory authority was limited to off-site employees. As such, his position and reputation within the organization did not tend to be specially coercive or threatening.

40 Rather than single Alexander out or call him to a management office, Fink spoke at Alexander's workstation and in the presence of another employee. Fink made but a single statement and did not pursue the issue when Alexander did not respond. His words contained no implication that employees would be adversely affected for their support of the Union, and they were presented as a declaration of fact rather than posed as a question.

50 In the totality of circumstances, I conclude that Fink's statement regarding Alexander's union activities did not amount to coercive interrogation or otherwise reasonably tend to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of their Section 7 rights. Accordingly, I find no merit to this allegation.

General Counsel's Motion to Amend Complaint

5 The General Counsel (GC Br. at 11) moves to amend the complaint to add the allegation that on February 17, Weckerman unlawfully threatened Kingsmore in violation of Section 8(a)(1). The motion is moot in light of my credibility resolution favoring Weckerman's version of what he said over Kingsmore's account, with the resulting finding that Weckerman said nothing about the Union to Kingsmore that day. Accordingly, I need not address the question of whether Section 10(b) bars such an amendment as untimely.

Conclusions of Law

15 1. The Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

20 2. By discharging Reggie Alexander and by suspending and discharging David Kingsmore, the Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act and violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

25 3. By threatening an employee with discharge for engaging in activities on behalf of the United Steelworkers, the Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act and violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

Remedy

30 Having found that the Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I find that it must be ordered to cease and desist and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

35 The Respondent having discriminatorily discharged employees, it must offer them reinstatement and make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits, computed on a quarterly basis from date of discharge to date of proper offer of reinstatement, less any net interim earnings, as prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), plus interest compounded daily, Kentucky River Medical Center, 356 NLRB No. 8 (2010), with an applicable rate of interest as computed in New Horizons for the Retarded, 283 NLRB 1173 (1987).

40 On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended⁴⁰
