DECISION

Statement of the Case

GEORGE ALEMÁN, Administrative Law Judge. This case was tried in San Juan, Puerto Rico on March 22-23, 2011, pursuant to a complaint issued on December 30, 2010,¹ by the Regional Director for Region 24 of the National Labor Relations Board (the Board) against Quality Health Services of P.R., Inc. d/b/a Hospital San Cristobal (the Respondent).² The complaint alleges that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act) by, on or about March 18, unilaterally changing and/or reducing the wages of its employees without giving the Union which represents said employees prior notice and an opportunity to bargain over the changes. On January 31, 2011, the Respondent filed an answer to the complaint denying the commission of any unfair labor practice.

All parties at the hearing were afforded a full and fair opportunity at the hearing to present oral and written evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to argue orally on the record. On the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after considering the briefs filed by Counsel for the General Counsel³ and the Respondent, I make the following

² The charge underlying the complaint was filed on September 17, 2010, and amended on December 14, 2010, by Unidad Laboral de Enfermeras(os) y Empleados de la Salud (the Union).

³ Counsel for the General Counsel has also filed a Motion to Correct certain grammatical and related inaccuracies in the transcripts, and to correct General Counsel Exhibit 2(b), which is the English version of General Counsel Exhibit 2(a), by including a page "56" which was inadvertently omitted from the record. No objection to said corrections having been filed or received, Counsel for the General Counsel's Motion to Correct is hereby granted, and made a part of the record as General Counsel Exhibit 13.

Findings of Fact

I. Jurisdiction

The Respondent, a Puerto Rico corporation, is a health care facility in Ponce, Puerto Rico, where it is engaged in providing acute health care services at its facility. During the past twelve months, the Respondent, in the course and conduct of its operation, derived gross revenues in excess of $250,000, and, during the same period, purchased and received at its Hospital facility goods valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points outside the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. The Respondent admits, and I find, that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act, and a health care institution within the meaning of Section 2(14) of the Act. It further admits, and I find, that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. Alleged Unfair Labor Practices

A. Factual Background

Since around 2002, the Union has served as exclusive collective bargaining representative for several groups of Respondent's employees, including two separate bargaining units of nursing employees.⁴ In 2002, it entered into a collective bargaining agreement with the Respondent, which expired on February 28, 2006, containing, among other things, provisions describing employee salary increases and other benefits, such as incentives and differentials, for the nursing personnel, and how such amounts were to be calculated. Some of these incentives or pay differentials include added compensation for nurses willing to work the apparently less desirable evening and midnight shifts, those working in the Hospital's high-risk departments such as intensive care, emergency room, delivery room, surgery, recovery, and nursery, and payment for special courses taken by nursing employees to improve their knowledge and skills in the field. (Tr. 33-34). The contract provides that the incentive/differential amounts paid to employees were not to be calculated as part of an employee's base salary but rather were to be paid over and above the base salary rate. (See, GCX-2, Art. XXIX).⁵

The other nursing unit, identified as "Unit 24-RC-8124'B" includes "All registered nurses employed by the Employer, excluding all other hospital employees including Executives, Administrators, Supervisors, Administrative Employees and Managers, Guards as defined by the Act."

clear that the above contract provision, regarding how incentive/differential pay was to be paid, was put into effect and, presumably, remained an established practice from at least 2002, when the contract first went into effect, until 2010, when, as discussed below, the practice was changed. Thus, Rodriguez testified that the incentive/differential amounts nursing employees were earning at its Hospital were not treated as part of an employees' base salary rate, but rather were being paid to employees over and above, or in addition to, their basic rate of pay. (Tr. 31).

Employee Amaritis Leon, a graduate nurse at Respondent's Hospital, confirmed the practice of paying incentive/differentials over and above the employees' base salary rate. Thus, she testified that in 2009, she received $200. monthly shift differential pay for working the midnight (11 pm-7 am) shift, and that this amount was paid in addition to, or over and above, her $1500 base salary rate. (Tr. 116, 120).

In July 2005, while the contract was still in effect, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico enacted a law, known as Law No. 27, establishing a minimum wage for nursing personnel in the private sector. (See GCX-6[b]). Thus, under Law No. 27, the minimum wage was set as follows: Practical Nurses -- $1,500; Nurses with an Associates Degree without experience -- $2,000; Nurses with a Bachelor's Degree but no experience --$2,350; Nurses with a Bachelor's Degree and experience -- $2,500. The above salary schedule was to be phased in over a three-year period. Law No. 27 does make clear that "[t]he new salary schedules to be established shall apply without impairing the terms of the different collective bargaining agreements in effect at the time this Act becomes effective." This provision was intended to avoid issues regarding the "impairment of contractual obligations" from arising. (GCX-6[b], p. 2).

As its collective bargaining agreement with the Union was still in effect when Law No. 27 was enacted, the Respondent, at that time, chose not to implement the salary increases called for by the new law. In July, 2005, the parties executed a Stipulation, to be effective from March 1, 2006 to February 28, 2010, wherein they made certain changes to employee salaries and other provisions of the 2002-2006 collective bargaining agreement, and extended the same to February 28, 2010. (See, GCX-3).

On March 1, the day after the parties' collective bargaining agreement expired, the Respondent implemented the minimum wage provisions of Law No. 27. At the same time, it altered its existing practice regarding how certain incentives/differentials were to be paid. Thus, on March 9, Rodriguez notified Respondent's Finance Director, Marianita Collazo Rivera of Respondent's decision to implement the provisions Law No. 27, and sent her a chart containing the names of Respondent's nursing employees, their job classifications, the base salary earned by each employee and the new salary they would be earning to bring them in compliance with the minimum wage requirements of Law No. 27. (See, GCX-4[b]). On page 5 of the chart, Rodriguez listed some of the employee incentives (rotation incentive; permanent shift incentive, special area incentive, incentive for education courses) that were now to be included as part of the employee's base salary, and which of them (uniforms, stipends, Christmas bonus, years of service) would remain excluded. Rodriguez informed Collazo that March 1, would be the effective date for the reclassification of employee salaries, and asked her to verify the information and to take the appropriate action.

By letter dated March 18, Rodriguez notified the nursing employees that, because the collective bargaining agreement was no longer in effect, the Respondent was implementing the minimum salary requirements of Law No. 27, and that employees would be seeing adjustments to their salaries, retroactive to March 1, in paychecks being issued that day. (GCX-5[b]). She explained that the adjustments included “several incentives” but did not specify what those incentives were.⁶

5 Union representative, Ariel Echevarria, first learned of the above changes on March 18, when employees brought the memo to his attention. The following day, March 19, Echevarria wrote to Rodriguez, asking that she provide the Union with a list of employees whose salaries were adjusted pursuant to Respondent’s implementation of Law No. 27. There is no evidence to indicate that the Union was, at any time prior to March 18, notified by the Respondent of its intent to implement the provisions of Law No. 27 on March 1, or its decision, in conjunction with 10 said implementation, to change how the nursing employees’ earnings from incentives and differentials were to be paid. Rodriguez, in fact, admitted that she had not notified the Union of the changes before sending out her March 18, letter to employees.⁷ Rodriguez complied with the Union’s information request by letter dated March 24, attached to which was a list containing the names of its “Graduate and Practical Nurses” represented by the Union who received
15 increases pursuant to Law No. 27. (See, GCX-7; GCX-8).

Echevarria wrote again to Rodriguez on April 16, pointing out that in her March 18, letter, Rodriguez had made reference to several incentives that were included in the wage adjustments made to the nursing employees’ salaries, and asked Rodriguez to describe in 20 writing, within 5 working days, what those incentives were. Rodriguez replied by letter dated April 28, that the incentives referenced in her March 18, letter included “area,” “special course,” and “permanent shift” incentives, explaining that these incentives “have always” been “allocated” to the nurses’ salary.

25 On November 30, Rodriguez sent Echevarria a letter, responding to the latter’s request for additional information. Attached to the letter is a chart, reflecting the period March 11- November 7, containing the names of unit employees, their department, the permanent shift worked, and the “permanent shift” incentive amounts paid to employees. (GCX-11).

30 B. The Parties’ Contentions

While admitting that the Union was not given prior notice or an opportunity to bargain, The Respondent nevertheless asserts that its March 1, decision to implement the minimum wage requirements of Law No. 27, following the February 28, expiration of the parties’
35 agreement, was not unlawful as it was statutorily required to do so. As it was legally obligated to carry out the mandate of Law No. 27 to raise the minimum wage rates of its nursing staff to the amounts set forth therein, it was, the Respondent further contends, under no obligation to notify and bargain with the Union over said changes, including the change in how incentive/differential earnings would be paid.

40 Counsel for the General Counsel does not appear to quarrel with the general proposition that the Respondent was statutorily obligated by Law No. 27, to raise the minimum wage of its nursing employees to amounts mandated in the statute. She does, however, contend that in seeking to comply with Law No. 27’s minimum wage requirements, the Respondent could not,
45 without first giving the Union notice and an opportunity to bargain, unilaterally alter or change its

⁶ Rodriguez’ letter does mention the incentives that are not included in the adjustment: “Christmas Bonus, Incentive for Years of Service, Benefits, Incentives for rotating shifts, Uniform Payments, etc.”

50 ⁷ The Respondent, in its opening remarks, acknowledged that the Union first learned of the changes on March 19, more than two weeks after the unilateral change was made. (Tr. 20).

established practice regarding how the incentive and differential amounts earned by nursing employees were to be calculated and paid. Thus, she argues that the Respondent's decision to end its long-held and contractually established practice, requiring that incentive and differential pay earned by nursing employees be calculated separately from, and be paid over and above, their base salary rate, and to require instead that said incentive and differential earnings be included and calculated as part of the base salary rate, amounted to an unlawful unilateral change in the nursing employees wages, hours, and terms and conditions of employees, and violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. I find merit in Counsel for the General Counsel's argument.

C. Discussion

It is well settled that a unilateral and material change in employee terms and conditions of employment regarding a mandatory subject of bargaining violates Section 8(a)(5) of the Act. NLRB v. Katz, 369 U.S. 736 (1962). American Medical Response of Connecticut, 356 NLRB No. 155, slip op. at 23 (2011). Mandatory subjects of bargaining are those comprised in the phrase "wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment" set forth in Section 8(d) of the Act. Incentives and differential pay are mandatory subjects of bargaining as they clearly fall within Section 8(d)'s definition of "wages." Waxie Sanitary Supply, 337 NLRB 303, 314 (2001); Northwest Graphics, Inc., 342 NLRB 1288, 1297 (2004); Charles Wilson Memorial Hospital, 331 NLRB 1529, 1530 (2000); Raven Government Services, Inc., 331 NLRB 651, 660 (2000); Royal Baking Co., 309 NLRB 155, 156 (1992); The Bunker Hill Co., 208 NLRB 27, 32 (1973).

The manner by which nursing employees here were being paid their incentive/differential earnings prior to March 1, e.g., over and above their base salary rate, was also a mandatory subject of bargaining that the Respondent was not at liberty to change unilaterally without giving the Union prior notice and an opportunity to bargain. This particular method of payment, as noted, was contractually established by the parties in 2002, and remained the practice until discontinued by the Respondent on March 1, in conjunction with its implementation of Law No. 27. The payment of incentives and differentials over and above the base salary rate of employees had, therefore, been established as a term and condition of employment both by contract and by virtue of it having become an established past practice.⁸ See, Hospital San Cristobal, 356 NLRB No. 95 (2011).

The Respondent, as noted, does not quarrel with the above facts. Still, it argues that it had no choice but to eliminate the practice of paying employees their incentive/differential pay over and above their base salary rate in order to comply with Law No. 27's minimum wage requirements, which compliance was mandatory and not optional.

Initially, I do not doubt, nor does Counsel for the General Counsel seem to question, that the Respondent was required to comply with the minimum wage provisions of Law No. 27 following expiration of the contract. The language of Law No. 27, which includes a provision calling for the imposition of fines for noncompliance, lends credence to Respondent's assertion that implementation of Law No. 27 was mandatory and not discretionary.

5 However, while compliance with Law No. 27 may have been mandatory, the statute itself does not mandate, or in any way dictate, how employers were to achieve compliance with its provisions. Law No. 27 did nothing more than establish minimum wage requirements for nursing employees in Puerto Rico based on their education level and experience. It contains no provision, nor does it explicitly or implicitly instruct, direct, or suggest to employers, on how best to achieve compliance. Thus, a plain reading of Law No. 27 makes clear that employers, like the Respondent here, had absolute discretion to decide what, if any, steps should be taken, or changes made to their payroll structure, to ensure compliance with Law No. 27. Nor did Law No. 27 preclude employers from exceeding the minimum wage rates established therein if they chose to do so.

15 Thus, the Respondent here was not required to discontinue the practice of paying employees their incentive/differential pay over and above their base salary rate in order to comply with Law No. 27. There were other options available to it that would have allowed it to comply with Law No. 27 without discontinuing the practice. The Respondent, for example, could have simply raised the wages of all nursing employees in the amount needed to bring their pre-March 1, base salary rates up to the levels called for by Law No. 27, and still kept intact its practice of paying nurses their incentive/differential earnings over and above their newly established post-March 1, base salary rates.

25 The Respondent, however, chose a different option. It decided instead to give wage increases only to those employees not receiving incentive/differential pay, thereby raising their pre-March 1, base salary rate to the minimum wage levels mandated by Law No. 27. Employees receiving incentive and differential pay, however, did not fare as well. Thus, rather than grant the latter the same wage increase needed to also bring their base salary rate up to Law No. 27 level, as it did with other employees, the Respondent instead used the incentive/differential pay these employees were already entitled to and earning, in place of a wage increase, to bring their base salary rate to Law No. 27's minimum wage requirements.

35 The Board has held that when an employer has discretion over how to implement certain changes in employee wages, hours, or other terms and condition of employment mandated or imposed on it by statute or regulation, it has a duty to notify and bargain with the collective bargaining representative of its employees over how such changes should be implemented before making any such changes. See, Sheltering Pines Convalescent Hospital, 255 NLRB 1195 (1981); also, United Parcel Service, 336 NLRB 1134, 1135 (2001); Armour & Co., 280 NLRB 824, 827 (1986). The Respondent here, as noted, had, and indeed, did exercise, such discretion when it chose to end the practice of paying employees their incentive/differential pay over and above their base salary rate as a way of complying with Law No. 27's minimum wage requirements. As this particular practice was a mandatory subject of bargaining, the Respondent was not at liberty to unilaterally discontinue or end it without first giving the Union notice and an opportunity to bargain over that decision.

45 The Respondent nevertheless argues, implicitly, that it did not have to bargain with the Union over its decision to end the practice because the decision had little or no impact on employee wages, or on any other term and condition of employment. It claims that elimination of the practice did not result in a reduction in pay because employees still receive their incentive/differential pay, albeit, now as part of their base salary rate rather than in addition or as a supplement to their base rate. The Board has, indeed, held that an employer is not required to bargain over changes so minimal as to have little or no impact on employee wages, or terms and conditions of employment. The Toledo Blade Co., Inc., 343 NLRB 385, 388 (2004); W-I Forest Products Co., 304 NLRB 957, 959 (1991). However, the Respondent's claim that its decision had little or no impact on employee wages is simply wrong and belied by the facts.

First, employees receiving incentive/differential pay effectively had their wages reduced when the Respondent, as noted, opted not to increase their base salary rate, while increasing that of other employees, in connection with its implementation of Law No. 27's minimum wage requirements. Second, and more importantly, these employees also saw their wages reduced as a result of Respondent's March 1, decision to end its longstanding practice of paying them their incentive/differential pay over and above their base salary rate. Prior to March 1, these employees, while earning the same base salary rate as other employees not receiving incentive/differential pay, nevertheless received higher wages because their incentive/differential earnings were paid to them over and above their base salary rate, while the wages of employees not entitled to such perquisites were limited to their base salary rate. Following the Respondent's March 1, discontinuance of the above practice, all employees, whether or not receiving incentive/differential pay, were, as readily admitted by Rodriguez, earning the same wages. Clearly, the Respondent's decision not to grant a wage increase to employees receiving incentive/differential pay, as it did with other employees, and to instead use the incentive/differential pay they were already entitled to and receiving as a way of raising their base salary rate to minimum wage levels called for by Law No. 27, resulted in a net loss in pay for these employees in an amount equal to their incentive/differential earnings.

The Respondent's assertion, therefore, that its discontinuance of the practice of paying employees their incentive/differential earnings over and above their base salary rate, had no impact whatsoever on their wages, is clearly without merit. Rather, the facts, as discussed above, make patently clear that employees receiving incentive/differential pay sustained a real and substantial reduction in their wages as a result of the discontinuance of the practice. The Respondent's claim that no harm was done here because employees continue to receive incentive/differential pay is somewhat disingenuous, for, clearly, from the perspective of employees entitled to such perquisites for having chosen to work less desirable shifts or in high risks area of the Hospital, the concept of incentive/differential pay now exists in name only. For all practical purposes, these employees no longer receive incentive/differential pay, as their wages now, with the so-called incentive/differential compensation included as part of their base salary rate are, as readily admitted by Rodriguez, no different from that of other employees.

The Respondent's March 1, decision here to change how employees' incentive/differential pay was to be paid can best be described by the phrase, "robbing Peter to pay Paul," for, in seeking to comply with Law No. 27, the Respondent simply changed the nature of the additional compensation employees were receiving for working less desirable shifts or in high risk areas from an incentive/differential benefit to a wage increase. The net result of its decision is that, while employees entitled to incentive/differential pay had their wages increased to bring them in line with Law No. 27's minimum wage levels, said increase came at the expense of their incentive/differential benefits, and, as noted, resulted in a net loss in wages for them in an amount equal to their incentive/differential earnings.

Accordingly, I find that the Respondent's unilateral decision to end the practice of paying employees their incentive/differential earnings over and above their base salary rate, which is a mandatory subject of bargaining, had a real, substantial, material, and adverse effect on employee wages and other terms and conditions of employment. Consequently, I further find that the Respondent's admitted failure to give the Union prior notice and an opportunity to bargain over that decision was unlawful, and violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, as alleged.

Conclusions of Law

By unilaterally discontinuing, as of March 1, the practice of paying incentives and differentials earned by nursing employees over and above their base salary rate without giving the Union prior notice or an opportunity to bargain over this change in its employees' terms and conditions of employment, the Respondent has engaged in an unfair labor practice affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

10

15

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I find that it must be ordered to cease and desist and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.
